

The FCC should not implement any proposal that would lessen in any manner Indiana's Telephone Privacy law protections. It is a huge relief to have minimized the number of unsolicited telemarketing calls and I would hardly endorse a law that would limit them even further, not increased them in any manner. I can now focus the little evening time I have on my priorities versus telling telemarketers why I am not interested in whatever it is they are peddling. What is gained by having telemarketing firms call homes that are not interested in what they are selling? It is a waste of their resources and my time so please do not change the effectiveness of state laws unless you plan on limiting telemarketers even further.
